Samsung S21 Plus: A beauty in violet

The in-between allrounder from this year's flagship series

MALA BHARGAVA

A Samsung phone is a Samsung phone. That's possibly a truism only a Samsung user will understand. But this particular Samsung phone is a real beauty. I'm checking it out in the Phantom Violet colour I begged them to send me, but others reviewing the phone are equally blown over by the colour variants they're looking at, including a Phantom Silver and Phantom Black.

You would think violet and gold would make for a garish over-the-top combination on a phone. But no such thing. The S21 Plus looks so good I wasted no time taking out a knitted dress in the same shade, adding a rose gold pendant, and holding the phone as the completion to a fashionable outfit. I had nowhere to go so settled down to explore the smartphone.

The glass on the back looks silken and the colour shifts as the light falls on it. It's subtle and more like lavender, not necessarily just feminine, however, despite the dress. There's Gorilla Glass Victus protection on the back and front panels. All that there is on the back is a quiet Samsung logo and the dominant camera housing with its three lens circles in a pale matte finish gold.

Stand-out features

The edge of this section wraps and disappears into the edge of the phone which is a somewhat more glossy gold rail all around. The buttons on the right edge are in the same metallic gold. It all looks very elegant and it's a huge pity that one will have to cover up the whole thing with a case. You'd want to, if you owned this phone, because sometime or the other, phones take a fall. It could also get scratched, which would really destroy the look. When you put it down on a surface, it's not entirely flat, but the wrap of the metal does help protect it somewhat and a case would help offset the camera bump more. The back is extra cool to the touch and with winter being almost over, is beginning to feel rather nice though it does happen to be smooth and slippery. This is by no means a small phone, but not uncomfortable or heavy to hold.

The S21 Plus is the in-between phone that has fewer stand-out features. The Ultra, on the higher side, has a more advanced camera as its highlight and the S21 stands out because it's the smallest of the three phones in this series and some people really crave compact devices. It also has a plastic back and is lighter. That leaves the S21 Plus being the most iterative phone of the lot but also one that's quite comprehensive in what it offers: in other words, an all-rounder.

This phone shares a lot with the higher end Ultra. It's almost the same size, at 6.7 inches worth of screen space. The display has the same look of expanse with the tiniest of dots for the front camera being barely noticeable. Only thing is the resolution is lower at 1080x2400. That's something many people have immediately pounced on but honestly, it's a beautiful display nonetheless. When you consider that it means paying Rs 20,000 to Rs 30,000 less, I certainly wouldn't mind the barely visible drop in resolution. It also supports the adaptive refresh rate of the Ultra going up to 120Hz if you want things super smooth or capping at 60Hz if you opt to save battery and resources if you want to. In this case, it doesn't auto drop all the way down to 10Hz but to 48Hz.

The S21 Plus also shares the newest Exynos 2100 with the other two phones but doesn't have a 16GB RAM option. Instead it has 8GB RAM with either 128GB or 256GB RAM storage and no memory card slot. The other things that are missing are the 3.5mm headphone jack that users don't seem to be letting go off and all the extras from the box including the charging brick, nice AKG earphones and a case. These are something companies can expect to see much grumpiness over for a long time to come. Is a pair of earphones really holding up the environment, for instance? I rather doubt it and the move to remove extras looks what it is — cost saving for the companies.

Performance on the S21 Plus is all lag-free, every bit as expected at this level. It gets a little warm with heavy tasks though. It works on Android 11 with Samsung's OneUI 3.0 interface, one of the most feature-rich but intuitive. But even a top-end Samsung phone is not immune from annoying push notifications from its MyGalaxy app and various other odds and ends. However, these can be tamed quickly enough. Unlike the S21 Ultra, the S21 Plus doesn't support the use of the S-Pen. It also has lower camera specs and no dual telephoto. Amazingly, when it comes to regular photos from the primary lens the images are not that dramatically different from the Ultra's 108MP lens which makes you wonder. The cameras are a 12MP wide, 12MP ultra-wide and a 64MP telephoto with 1x optical and 3x hybrid zoom. So it's in the zoom department that the S21 Plus has been stepped down in comparison to the Ultra. If ultimate video and very large hi-res photos are important to you, it's best to look at the Ultra, but if your photo needs are more 'regular' the camera set on this phone performs well enough though just not in any breakthrough manner. In fact, not very different from the previous gen. The front camera is a 10MP.

Battery & wireless charging

Other elements worthy of mention are a 4,800mAh battery that holds up very well and has 25W charging—nothing more like some of the much cheaper phones do these days, sadly. It supports wireless charging. It has an IP68 rating and is absolutely a 5G phone.

When it comes down to it, the changes from the previous S20 Plus definitely don't warrant an upgrade from the S20 line or even, if your device is in good shape, from the S10 series unless you specifically need the extra processing power or are just plainly an enthusiast and have the money to spend. Coming from an older phone or even a non-Samsung phone, the S21 Plus is a beautifully designed and 'complete' phone with great performance and a very good set of cameras.

Price: Starts at ₹74,200 at Amazon, elsewhere starts ₹81,999
Pros: Very elegant and premium with unique design, a complete good performer, future ready with 5G, IP68, latest processor, good set of cameras, beautiful high-refresh display
Cons: Expensive, many complaints on the lack of memory card, slot and 3.5mm jack, no essential extras in box, expensive

Poco M3: Value for money on all fronts

This phone succeeds a bestseller and brings improvements including a bigger battery with a lighter weight

MALA BHARGAVA

Poco's new M3 has some big shoes to fill. Its previous gen, M2, became the best selling phone online across all brands and on all platforms. But the M3 has been given all the weapons it needs to beat the M2 at its own game, not the least of which is a better price. Even without that, there would have been plenty in its favour, including a whacky new design.

The Poco M3 came to me dressed in its signature Poco Yellow. My first amused thought was that it looked like a little schoolbus. Well, it's almost the same eye-catching shade and it has a big camera compartment that stretches from one edge to the other—not a big camera, but a big design element. That segment is all black and looks for all the world like the window in the bus. But before I get carried away with that bit of fancifulness, let me say that the M3 is a really youthful, playful nice looking gadget and a refreshing change from all the other glitzy phones around.

Bright and light

The back is made of some kind of leathery material that looks and feels good, gives you a good grip, and manages not to show any fingerprints and smudges. It's bright and attractive but if it's too much for you, you can opt for one of the other colours: Power Cool Black or Blue. I think I would choose the little schoolbus if I were buying this phone.

The Poco M3 looks really big—probably because of the clean expanse of bright colour—but it isn't particularly bigger than most phones today and even manages to stay surprisingly light given that it has an enormous 6,000mAh battery. You don't see that everyday! It should do very well for someone who talks endlessly on the phone and doesn't want to be bothered having to recharge in the middle of the day. If you're a light user, it'll probably last several days. It supports fast charging at 18W and 00 applause please—there's a 22W charger in the box.

This phone has a 6.53-inch FullHD+ (1080x2340) LCD display, better than is typical for this price. There's a small curvy notch which one can forgive and forget. The display is nice enough and has quite deep blacks and rich colours and you only remember it's an LCD when you look at a white background. It's perfectly workable for everyday purposes if you're on a budget. It also has stereo speakers though they sound exceedingly tinny. It even has Gorilla Glass 3 protection. Also, before anyone thinks of complaining, there's a 3.5mm headphone jack and Xiaomi's famous IR blaster. Move over. There's even a power-button-mounted fingerprint sensor. It took me a longish battle to register my fingerprint but once done, it turns out quite fast enough to unlock.

The Poco M3 works on the Qualcomm Snapdragon 662. It's a mid-range processor with eight cores and a speed of up to 2.0GHz. It pairs up with GPU Adreno 610. As someone accustomed to reviewing the fastest snappiest phones, yes, there's obviously a difference in the way this budget phone will work. There's that evident pause before switching from one thing to another; a bit of stutter while scrolling; a slight hesitation before something loads—but that's only as much as is expected. Something faster will obviously cost more. For basic tasks, it does the job as long as you give it some patience. The SoC is working with 6GB of LPDDR4 RAM which is more than usual for this segment where you've been getting 4GB mostly. There are two storage variants: 64GB and 128GB plus expandable memory. There's UFS 2.2 storage on the higher end model versus 2.1 on the lower end.

Android 10 for now

The software on this phone is Android 10 for now, with a promised upgrade to Android 11. With that is Xiaomi's MIUI12 specifically tuned up for a Poco device. MIUI isn't one of my favourites but many like it just fine. There are plenty of preloaded apps and annoying push notifications from GetApps though this phone isn't ad supported. 21.5GB or so is taken up by what's already on the phone, and I was only able to bring it down by 1GB after uninstalling things that would let me uninstall. On the other hand, there are things like an FM radio and themes that users in India are fond of.

No one would have believed the level of cameras one gets on a budget phone now. The primary lens is a 48MP and while we shouldn't fall into the trap of thinking that megapixels necessarily make for great images, the camera does OK. It's decidedly fuzzy in low light despite a night mode. We'll ignore the 2MP accompaniments. The front camera is an 8MP. Overall, the Poco M3 is a killer deal for the price it comes at. It remains to be seen whether the competition lets it rest on its laurels. Don't buy it for the cameras, but do buy it for the price and for basic tasks specially all-day calling.

Price: ₹10,999 and ₹11,999
Pros: Great specs for this price category, unique eye catcher design, good performance and cameras for the price, huge battery and good battery life, total value, great price
Cons: Fuzzy pics in low light, tinny-sounding speakers
